

15th INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE

SÁNDOR DOR FER ENC ZI

MADRID, OCTOBER 14 TO 17, 2026

Disavowal, pain, and suffering in today's world

Welcome

It is a pleasure to welcome you to the 15th International Sándor Ferenczi Conference, taking place in Madrid from 14 to 17 October 2026, organised by the International Sándor Ferenczi Network in collaboration with the Madrid Psychoanalytic Association and the institutions that are making this event possible.

Over the course of these days, professionals from numerous countries will come together to share research, clinical experiences and theoretical developments inspired by the work of Sándor Ferenczi. The conference provides a unique forum for dialogue between different psychoanalytic traditions and related disciplines, keeping alive the spirit of openness, creativity and critical reflection that characterised Ferenczi's thinking.

The theme of this year's conference, 'Disavowal, pain and suffering in today's world', invites us to reflect on the extraordinary relevance of Ferenczi's contributions to our understanding of both individual psychological suffering and contemporary forms of violence, exclusion and social trauma. Concepts such as denial, identification with the aggressor, confusion of tongues and the elasticity of technique continue to provide essential tools for clinical work and for analysing the challenges of our time.

The scientific programme brings together plenary lectures, panels, working groups and forums for exchange that will address metapsychology, clinical practice, the history of psychoanalysis and the many ways in which Ferenczi's thought continues to resonate today. It is our hope that this conference will foster an open, rigorous and respectful dialogue, where the diversity of perspectives enriches collective reflection and strengthens the bonds between colleagues from different cultures and generations.

Madrid, a city deeply linked to the history of psychoanalysis and to Ferenczi's own journey, offers us a privileged setting for this international gathering. We hope that, in addition to the scholarly exchange, you will be able to enjoy the city's cultural heritage, its hospitality and the opportunity to spend a few days in the company of colleagues from all over the world.

We sincerely thank you for your participation and wish you an enriching stay and a conference full of encounters, ideas and new collaborations.

Themes of the 15th Sándor Ferenczi International Conference

Disavowal, pain, and suffering in today's world

The topic of our 15th Conference considers fundamental matters in Ferenczi's work and connects with acutely critical contemporary psychological and social issues. Pain and suffering—often the result of disavowal and abuse of power—demand ethical, clinical, and compassionate listening. Pain is inherent to human existence. Freud and Ferenczi agree that it must be recognized, affirmed, and symbolically elaborated in order to be integrated as an experience. Suffering, on the other hand, arises from asymmetrical power relationships.

Ferenczi's identification with the aggressor and confusion of tongues concepts reflects a distinctive form of psychological violence: disavowal. Disavowal denies or invalidates the suffering of the other, whether on the familial or on larger societal level. Social disavowal denies the voices of vulnerable people, and intensifies inequality, racism, fanaticism, hatred of the other and imperils our environment and ecosystems.

Ferenczi's thinking is remarkably relevant in our divided world. Aloneness of the suffering person is one of the destructive elements of trauma in the family and on the larger societal level, according to Ferenczi. His radical ethics of listening, his attention to unacknowledged trauma, to the vulnerability of the person and his critique of technical neutrality in the face of suffering offer fundamental tools to appreciate our challenging time and to connect to the constructive and with others.

We invite everyone to share their research and reflections about our complex topic in a collegial environment where the sense of aloneness of facing the challenges in our work and our lives can be lessened in our discussions. Please submit your clinical, metapsychological, or historical contributions addressing any of the four themes of the conference.

The four themes of the Conference use Ferenczi's contributions and their relevance in the world today.

1. "The problem of acceptance of unpleasant ideas", 100 years later

In "The problem of acceptance of unpleasant ideas" (1926), Ferenczi seeks to clarify the genesis of mental functioning and the incorporation of the sense of reality into the psychic apparatus, with the development of ego functions and the intrapsychic structure of the object. He positions the feelings of omnipotence and sense of reality as two poles in tension. The modification of omnipotence requires the acceptance of unpleasant ideas as a necessary condition for nurturing the sense of reality. Here Ferenczi follows and develops Freud's arguments, the polarity of pleasure/displeasure versus sense of reality allows us to account for the problems of object and subject internal development and access to reality. The thematic arguments around which the central ideas of this work are developed are as follows:

1. Significance of "the acceptance of unpleasant Ideas" in the process of transition from the feeling of omnipotence to the sense of reality.
2. Negation and affirmation of displeasure.

3. Drive disentanglement/entanglement, ambivalence, and capacity for objectivity. The development of the object.
4. Psychogenesis, adaptation, and preservation of life. Bioanalytic drifts. Entanglement, destruction, and becoming.
5. Calculating machine, calculation work, and sense of reality. Exogenesis of the drive.

2. Disavowal, violence, and trauma in today's world

Ferenczi understood complex, multiply occurring disruptions as catastrophic. Terrorism, wars, genocide, racism, political, demographic and ecological disasters fragment the self and the world.

Ferenczi's recognition of relational trauma (confusion of tongues, catastrophe, identification with the aggressor, terrorism of suffering, alien transplants, strange will, unnecessary compulsion, excessive repression, disavowal, etc.) is significantly intertwined with the question of social trauma. With Ferenczi we can understand and elucidate traumas that catastrophically impact on the sense of safety of the individual, the community and social life in general.

Ferenczi's considerations on the importance of disavowal are particularly significant, and crucial to understanding systematic cover-ups, silencing, and disavowal by the powerful of obvious and widespread negativities that maintain and exacerbate chaos and crises. We face an intense social disavowal in capitalist societies. Exploitation of the vulnerable, precariousness, structural inequality of workers, racism, gender violence accompanied by vicarious violence towards daughters and sons, social exclusion, lack of rights, lack of protection and security are all being disavowals. This web of aggressive disavowals intensifies a violent social trauma that tears lives apart and dehumanizes the defenseless.

3. Pain, suffering, and processes of subjectivation

The “experience of pain” (Freud, 1895) occurs when a quantity of excitement cannot be adequately linked or discharged by the psychic apparatus. For pain to transcend the dimension of a mere bodily sensation, it must be constituted as an experience of displeasure. Human beings develop into subjects, with an ethical sense in their relationship with others, the world and themselves, from the experience of unpleasure (Ferenczi, 1926). When individual development is predominantly shaped by the dynamics of the identification with the aggressor, ruled by powerful parental, educational, or public figures, displeasure is transformed into an experience of suffering. Subjectivity is not only a result of language or the unconscious, but it develops in a complex web between the psychic apparatus and the material, symbolic, and historical conditions surrounding the subject. It is not only about desire, but also how the subject's place in the family and social fabric is transmitted, how the child is received, seen, named and desired by the Other. In the dynamic process of becoming a person, social and cultural influences often interfere with the process through violence, or abandonment. Opposing and unseen areas of inner psychic structures stay unrepresented. The suffering of trauma persists without words as a vague and difficult experience to convey to others, increasing the aloneness of the silently suffering person. This helplessness often fuels the suffering person's omnipotent defenses and a greater strengthening of the identification with the aggressor, presenting highly challenging clinical situations.

4. Tenderness as the antithesis of hatred and cruelty

One of Ferenczi's greatest contributions to psychoanalytic theory is the importance he assigns to affection and sincerity in all relational spheres and his advocacy of a metapsychology of affections in the analyst's work in a clinical setting.

In particular, the core of his great contribution to clinical practice and the metapsychology of trauma was his 1933 article “Confusion of Tongues Between Adults and the Child, The Language of Tenderness and Passion” in which he describes the violent clash between passion [Leidenschaft] and tenderness [Zärtlichkeit]. In his view, while passion, whether erotic or hateful, is an uncontrollable, blind, intrusive and overwhelming emotion, tenderness is a basic vital emotion that is based on trust in others and is therefore more open to the outside world.

For Ferenczi, the fundamental question is how the analyst accesses the sensitivity, vulnerability, and the creativity in the fragmented patient and communicates with them. His answer is clear. Such work is only possible by placing oneself in the same position as the patient, that is, by accessing one's own childlike and tender dimension. Ferenczi's emphasis of the elasticity of psychoanalytic technique (1928), rather than frustration, was derived from such understanding.

The opposite emotions of passion and tenderness are relevant to the theme of this conference, to emphasize the important healing function that tenderness brings to suffering, pain, hatred, and violence in our divided world. It allows us to illuminate ambivalence, a necessary condition for any practice of nonviolence. Tenderness, unlike hatred, promotes connection, empathy, and compassion. Unlike passion or cruelty, tenderness is supportive, rejecting the omnipotence of hatred in favor of hospitality and acceptance. ●
